DEATH OF LEAP YEAR.

Oh, girls, they say that leap year's gone!
I can't believe it true,
I fear we've waited precious time,
I know I have, have you?
The fact is this, my many sweets,
To call from, does not mean,
And we've such modest, tender things,
So useful every one—
That when we venture over far,
Like roses in the air,
(With sweet words trembling on our lips,
And aching just begun),
We blushed and looked down,
And left our half-unfolded,
And fluttered off, for very fright,
With all our sweetest things.
So time has slipped away, and now,
Old Leap Year's done and gone,
Come, let's plant wildflowers or his grave,
To mark the place where he has flown.
Oh, dreadful twenty-three,
We're no kind of year for you,
But we're a longing, lingering love,
For dear old twenty-two.
And, ladies, are you old his year,
This harvest of the fair?
No more sweet-scented blots-does,
Shall not your cheeks be fair?
No pretty little blushing now,
With cheeks that thin and pale,
For blue-eyed Will or black-eyed Phil,
Or any other lad.
We know you'll miss us over much,
His lonely, woe-filled hour,
But we can't help the thought of time,
Or turn it backward now,
There's something sweet we'd like to tell
You Freds and Neds, and Dicks:
We cannot now, it is too late,
Just what we've been doing.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF BEARDS.

The wearing of the beard was, by some nations, strictly regarded as a religious rite, from which dispensation was possible. Great is management because a matter of grave importance. The Egyptians estimated the Persians as no better than infidels, forasmuch as they would not adopt their custom of cutting the whiskers. A long and equine beard was worn owing to their obesity, which arose from a national sense of honor. So highly did the Persians value the beard that, according to St. Chrysostom, their kings had this national appendage shaved or cut with gold threads. This style of haircut ornamentation was improved upon in subsequent ages by the rulers of France, who had their flowing beards fastened with gold buttons. None need be told what a vast value the Turks set upon their beards. Sooner than be depowered of them, they would prefer the ignominy of being publicly whipped, or branded, may even accept death itself. Only those who attend the seraglio are shaved, as a token of servitude. The Arab is known to preserve his beard with scrupulous care, almost bordering on devotion; in all probability, out of respect for the Islam Prophet, who wore this majestic mark of manhood. The announcing of the beard with augments is traceable to extremely remote times, and was constantly practiced by the Jews and Romans. The Turks still adhere to this custom. On occasions of state occasions of the ceremonies observed to be sprinkled water on the beard of the visitant, and then to perfume it with rose water.

Among the ancient Greeks and Romans the beard was an object of great veneration. Not only so, but it was considered to possess some occult charm, and regarded as a sacred pledge of confidence and protection. According to the Grecian mythology, when Theseus sought to avenge the wrongs of his son, he embraced the knees of Jupiter and touched his beard in supplication. Another illustration of this is presented in the platonic story of Dolon and Diomedes. The former thought if he could but touch the warrior's beard his life would not have been forfeited. The Greeks did not commence to discard the beard until the time Alexander the Great, who ordered the Macedonians to cut off the beard, simply as a precautionary measure, lest when in battle they would afford the enemy an undue advantage. This practice was abandoned in Justinian's reign, when long beards once more came into vogue. The philosophers, however, always distinguished themselves from the vulgar in this respect, by suffering their beards to grow, irrespective of the imperial mandate to the contrary.

With the Normans the beard was held in abhorrence; somewhat similar to the ancient Britons, who contained themselves with the cultivation of hair on the upper lip. The beard, however, was allowed to grow by the Anglo-Saxons. When William, the Conqueror, among other acts of oppression, compelled the English to cut off their beards, the effect was regarded as a wanton display of authority and tyranny. Some preferred abandoning their country rather than conform to so intolerant and insolent a decree. Peter of Russia made a similar statement. In both instances such arbitrary laws were universally disregarded. Sometimes they led to popular outbreaks. It is said that upon Harold dispatching scouts into the camp of William I, they returned in ecstasy at the cheering prospect of a speedy victory. They reported that their enemies were not soldiers but priests, having all shaven faces. Singular as to say, on the seal of William the Conqueror he appears with both mustaches and beard.

The fashion of wearing beards obtained in France till Louis XIII. ascended the throne. The premature death of his son, Henry IV., caused a revolution in this custom, though the Duke of Sully did not conform to the dress of his courtiers. Being once ridiculed for his obstinacy, he said to the King, "Sire, when your illustrious father did me this honor to consult me on his weighty affairs, the first act of his was to send off all the buffoons and stage dancers of his court." Beards were again worn in the reign of Louis XIV. Comte, Corneille, and Moliere, the noblest kings of France, took much pride in their beards. Dupin, the famous Bishop of Clermont, who built the Jesuit Church at Paris, is reported to have had the finest beard ever known—"too fine a beard for a bishop" as the canons of his cathedral thought. Hence they came to the rude resolve to denude him of it, and actually made the attempt one day in church. The prelate, perceiving the danger and the shape of his beard, seized the dean and others with the instruments of torture in the shape of scissors, razors, etc., made the best haste he could out of the edifice, and fled some leagues off to the castle of Beauregard. Here he died, and at length died, it is said, through sheer vexation.

The Eastern and Western Churches have not only had controversies respecting points of doctrine and discipline; they have had disputes concerning beards. One church enjoyed that ecclesiastical should wear them. Another church positively prohibited this usage by express constitution de radeis barbibus. Even the Greeks used to shave the beards of those of the rank of the Roman clergy once assumed the right of legislating on the matter of beards. The hirsute ornament of Henry I, for example, was condemned by some priests from the pulpit; and so positively that the King, to get rid of such tumults, had to yield to their demand. Yet, notwithstanding this, in the twenty years after the death of Henry I, the beards were carefully cultivated, and worn with pride. How touching that incident at the execution of Sir Thomas More, when he drew his bearding beard from the fatal ax, and naively remarked to the executioner, "My beard has not been guilty of treason!"—The Dark Blue.

THE IMPORTANCE OF DRESS.

Now, if close to reach, as it evidently aspires to be, the platform of a picture, or a poem, or a fine building, the art it adopts must be either good or bad art. I believe the melancholy truth to be that we can hardly find a modern dress which is not throughout in the worst taste, and opposed to the principles of all good art. Yet, at the same time, I think that the milliners mean well. I think that the women who spoil themselves with the milliner's devices mean well, too. They do want to make the best of themselves, to be "things of beauty," and not oycases. But how to do this, they don't know, they don't think, and they generally refuse to learn. There are some ladies who always look well; they are not necessarily the prettiest ones; but they are women gifted with fine natural colors and features, generally without knowing why. These, however, are exceptions. If everybody who could hold a pencil were suddenly called upon to paint a picture, there would be only a few out of every score at least who would betray any sense of grace, perspective, color, or design. Therefore it would be best for those who are not of the sacred few to receive instruction of some wise and good kind, before they wasted time and good material to so little purpose. But what is true of painting is true also of dress. We need not all paint; but we have all got to dress; and the sooner dress is recognized by our women as an art of product, the better (and probably the cheaper) they will be able to apparel themselves. What usually takes place in England in the matter of dress? Vain persons who are proud of their appearance, and wish to make the most of themselves, spend much time, in covering themselves with things that make an artist lift up hands and eyes of regret, astonishment, and pity. Those who are not vain often exclaim, "O, let us avoid those wretched shops! Show me no more stuffs and ribbons; I will wear anything that is brought to me!" And both act from ignorance. The vain person wastes time and money for her own sake; the other is not educated enough to dream that there is anything to know that is worth knowing—does not sufficiently respect what God has given her to care how she looks—so there is always a discord between her inner and her outer self. Yet dress and a proper care for it ought not to minister merely to vanity, nor impart in any degree to the mind of a woman paget to the sake of those about her. It is a fault, not a virtue, to be reckless of the impression one leaves on the eye, just as it is a fault to be indifferent to the feelings of others; in either case there is a sad absence of those subtle and beautiful perceptions that constitute a delicate and gentle mind.—St. Paul's Magazine.
